2023 has been a milestone year for women in entertainment.

Women directors and entertainers dominated the box office, from Barbie to Eras.

Women officially star in the majority of the most popular TV shows, according to ReFrame's latest research.

Last awards season, industry influencers and tastemakers rallied behind women with innovative FYC campaigns, and awards bodies began the push for gender-neutral acting awards.

How can we make this another landmark awards season for women, non-binary and trans talent?

the 2023
ReFrame
Voter Guide

Your comprehensive guide to gender-balanced productions and diverse heads of department eligible for film awards.

Make your vote count.

Use the 2023 ReFrame Voter Guide to gender-balance the ballot this awards season.

About the ReFrame Stamp

The ReFrame Stamp is awarded to narrative and animated features that hire "qualifying candidates" - women, non-binary, gender non-conforming and transgender people - in 4 out of 8 key roles including writer, director, producer, lead, co-leads, and department heads. Additional points are awarded to productions that hire women of color in key positions, and to those with overall gender parity in their crew.

Using data from the ReFrame Stamp for Narrative Feature Film, the 2023 ReFrame Voter Guide identifies qualifying candidates eligible for film awards. The Guide covers the following major awards categories, consistent with the scope of ReFrame Stamp data:

- |                          |                        |
|--------------------------|------------------------|

2022

7 of the year's 100 most popular films had a woman cinematographer.

Of the 7, 1 cinematographer was a woman of color.

Mandy Walker was the only qualifying candidate nominated for Best Cinematography for Elvis.

Best Cinematography is the only Academy Award a woman has never won.

2022

10% of the year's 100 most popular films had a qualifying candidate as a composer.

9 films had a woman composer, and 1 film had a non-binary composer.

Of the 10, 3 composers were women of color.

10% was an all-time high in ReFrame's data since collection began in 2017. However, no women or other qualifying candidate composers were nominated for the Academy Awards.
